COMMENTARY

October was no ordinary month. Markets hit new highs, Amazon complained of steel prices and Tesla added $300bn in market cap, largely off the back of Hertz allegedly ordering 100k electric vehicles. For perspective, that's 20 times the market cap of Hertz, 20% more than the value of Pfizer and roughly 300x the operating income Tesla may make on the order.

The combined value of Tesla and Amazon is now almost $3 trillion and yet their combined free cash flow generation over the past year is a "paltry" $400m.

Compare this to one of our holdings, asset manager Franklin Resources, which earned more than that in the last 3 months alone ($645m). This is all cash flow because it doesn't hold inventories nor suffer bad debts on the $1.5 trillion it manages, and most of it is "free" because it doesn't spend money building warehouses and factories. Yet the company is only valued at $20bn, approximately 0.7% the value of "TeslAmazon".

Or our holding in leading Dutch bank, ABN Amro. ABN is extremely well-capitalised, with a core CET1 ratio of 18%. Except for 2020, when the bank took excessive loan loss provisions related to the pandemic, the bank has been consistently profitable for the past 10 years. The Netherlands enjoys low unemployment, the economy is outperforming the Eurozone, and house price growth is strong. Yet ABN trades at just 7x our estimate of normal earnings and substantially below book value. Based on a reasonable re-rating, which we think will occur over time as the bank resumes dividend payments, we believe the company offers ~50% return potential.

These are examples of the extreme valuation dispersion in global markets and hopefully explains why we are so excited about the absolute and relative return potential of our Fund. One never knows for how long the valuation dislocation will last, but company valuations always normalise in the long-term for simple economic reasons - if assets are priced too low relative to earnings, they get acquired or astute management unlocks value. If profits and prospects are abnormally high, either they run out of growth opportunities or competition arrives - remember AOL, Nokia and Nortel Networks, and more recently Zoom?

Year-to-date performance is broadly in line with the market, illustrating that buying the latest, raciest stocks is not the only way to generate investment performance. At times like this, we keep our heads down and invest sensibly, far away from any mania.

Transaction Costs are a measure of the costs incurred in buying and selling the underlying assets of the Fund. Both the TER and TC are expressed as a percentage of the daily NAV of the Fund calculated over a period of three years on an annualised basis.

Over the period 01/10/18 to 30/09/21:

Total Expense Ratio	1.43%
Transaction Costs	0.20%
Total Investment Charge	1.63%

A higher TER does not necessarily imply a poor return, nor does a low TER imply a good return. The current TER may not necessarily be an accurate indication of future TERs. Transaction Costs are a necessary cost in administering the Financial Product and impacts Financial Product returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of Financial Product, the investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.
